FEEBLE LIGHT ON THE DOUBLE TRAGEDY

Mystery of the Deaths of Clara Schneider and Frank Bennett Still Dark--They Lie Side by Side.

IN NUUANU cemetery lie the bodies of Clara Schneider and Frank P. Bennett, side by side.
Only a few feet of earth separate the pair whose mysterious deaths have puzzled press and police, and the investigation of which promises small results.

At the coroner's inquest yesterday in the case of the dead woman, it was shown that she had worried for many days over failure to get back from Bennett the money she had loaned him, and that she had in a vague way threatened to kill herself if it was not returned.

W. J. C. Ottmann, who testified, said that Bennett often acted queerly. Ott-mann said he thought the man was not just right in his head as the result of old bullet wounds. This is the first of any insanity theory, and most of Bennett's familiars would ridicule it.

Bennett, by sworn testimony, was proved to have been a frequent and heavy drinker, and a user of morphine. A witness under oath said that he had often caroused with Bennett, and that the latter for months past had been in the habit almost nightly of leaving his quarters at Camp McKinley and spending the nights in disipation.

Despite the statements of the officers at the camp, men who esteemed the army trainmaster highly, and who resent any cloud on his character, Bennett was a past master in deception. A man who claimed on the witness stand yesterday to have been a close intimate of Bennett, told the coroner's jury that Bennett could drink a great quantity of whisky or champagne, and though drunk, give but trifling signs of his condition to those who did not know his peculiarities.

That Miss Schneider anticipated a tragedy was made plain by the testimony of "Mammy" Wilder, a fellow servant at the Neumann home at Wal-kiki, who said that when the woman left on Tuesday evening to go to her tryst with Bennett, she bade her good-by in words that portended a possible separation forever.

The unfolding of the financial transactions between Miss Schneider and Bennett showed the remarkable credulousness of the dead woman, or else the implicit faith she placed in the scout.

Bennett had told one man that she was his sweetheart, and Miss Schneider had said that Bennett asked her to marry him. Bennett received her money, something over $400, on the understanding that he was to pay her 7 per cent per month, and the memorandum found in her purse after death had the principle and interest at that rate figured out for September and October.

All the witnesses who are thought to be able to throw any light on either the death of Miss Schneider or that of Bennett were before the coroner's jury yesterday save one, a Mr. Campbell. He, it is said, handled her funds at one time, but cleared the debt immediately upon her request. From Campbell she transferred her little savings to Bennett, likely because of the alluring profits offered by him.

According to the witnesses, Miss Schneider wanted to leave Honolulu for either Seattle or Manila—the testimony differs—and lacked only the money Bennett had, to start her on her journey.

When she was found dying on her bed a shawl was about her shoulders, and on this Deputy Sheriff Chilling-worth noticed a whitish powder. This shawl is in the hands of Chemist Shorey, who will analyze the powder.
If it proves to be morphine—the poison which killed the woman—it will be a strong point against the murder theory.

If she took the poison voluntarily it is quite probable she was in such an excited state that she spilled some of it on her garments. No evidence has been discovered as to where the poison was administered, or just when or where it was obtained.

MRS. LEMKE'S EVIDENCE.
The testimony of Mrs. Lemke developed several interesting points at the examination yesterday afternoon. Mrs.
Lemke, according to her statement, was the first to announce the death of Clara Schneider to Frank Bennett, and she says he was agitated and very incredulous.

"He called at my house," stated Mrs.
Lemke, "between 7 and 8 o'clock on the evening of the day Clara died. He was dressed all in black, with a cutaway coat, and didn't wear his broad-brimmed hat. I never saw him dressed like that before, and I started to ask him why he was dressed that way, but he spoke so quick and asked how Miss Schneider was. I said, 'Why, Clara is dead.' He acted surprised and looked at me like he didn't know what to think and he said, 'I can't believe it. I can't believe it. They told me over the telephone from Neumann's house that she was getting better.'"

"He said he had telephoned in the morning or about noon, and they told him she was better, and that after the afternoon he telephoned again, but received the answer that every one had gone to town, and he couldn't find out anything, so he came to my house to find out how Clara was. He stayed quite a little while and we talked, but he didn't say much about Clara except that it was too bad. We had a glass of beer together; my husband opened a bottle of beer, and we all drank it together. Yes, Bennett drank the beer, or wine, or whatever my husband opened, whenever he came to our house.
He would drink, but he was sober-minded, and drank very seldom. No, I never would believe he was a bad man, and I never would believe he would poison Miss Schneider before she died, and he killed himself, but afterward it looked like he must have something to do with it. I can think no other way."

Mrs. Lemke had known Clara Schneider for five years, ever since she came with her brother on the Columbia from Seattle to work in Honolulu. Miss Schneider had worked for her some time, and had stayed with her when she had no work at the time Mrs.
Lemke kept the "White House." Clara Schneider had been very reticent and told very little about her life, except that she had lent money to someone to invest for her. She seemed of a happy disposition, and her only troubles were about her folks. She was homesick and wanted to go to Seattle, where her brother was, and she worried about her folks in Germany.

At the time Mrs. Lemke kept the White House, she stated that Bennett had often stayed at her house as a lodger. At first he came and took a room by the night, asking her to receive a room always for him until 10 o'clock, and if he did not come by that time he would not be there at all. Afterward he took a room from her by the month, and stayed there a great part of the time. He had lots of books there, and cigars and things. This was then he was supposed to be stopping out, and if he did not come by the time he would not be there at all. After-
